Apple had the team that developed this feature, but they are licensing out the technology to a 3rd party. This means that Apple is effectively giving Google a contract to include the maps in their applications. This has created quite a bit of controversy and came to a head when Apple made another version of Maps, Google Maps, which they sent to Samsung for use in their phone. Samsung then released it to the public on November 1st and it is not a licensed version. When I say "fake", I'm not necessarily implying a fake, but a pirated, or cheap imitation. To put it bluntly, Samsung has gone to work and recreated Google's maps. I downloaded it last night to take a closer look to see how Samsung has made theirs. It is a fact that the people that have made these apps are not Google employees, so they do
